Along with Bourdieu's notion of a "feel for the game" came his theory of the game itself. Bourdieu understood the social world as being divided up into a variety of distinct arenas or "fields" of practice like art, education, religion, law, etc., each with their own unique set of rules, knowledges, and forms of capital.

Fields | Social Theory Rewired

In the social sciences, Martin 2003 identifies and discusses three major and distinct if overlapping variants of field theory: the social-psychological perspective of Gestalt theory associated with Lewin 1951, the stratification and domination emphasis in Bourdieu's field theory, and the interorganization relations institutionalism associated with DiMaggio and Powell 1983. While the latter exercises considerable influence in organization studies and draws upon Bourdieu, it is Bourdieu's ...
