UNIVERSALISM WITH HUMILITY: GROUNDING HUMAN RIGHTS IN A ...

This is a study of how one can successfully justify the universality of human rights to people with a diversity of beliefs and values. I argue that intercultural dialogue is an essential part of working out an interpretation of human rights that is acceptable to a broad range of cultures. I develop this position through critical engagement with three recent philosophical approaches to the ...

Human rights are anchored in the prior status human beings have. Yet this status of dignity and worth is not free-floating; it requires metaphysical grounding to make sense of this entitlement. Jacques Maritain, who helped craft the language of the Universal Declaration, wrote: “we agree on these rights, providing we are not asked why.

Grounding human rights in religion may thus seem rather risky, even dangerous. Nevertheless, most of the horrors committed in the name of religion have resulted from the misuse of religious scriptures, and thus do not demonstrate that Perry is off the mark in arguing that human rights are based on a religious world view.

Theoretically Justifying Human Rights: A Critical Analysis

Of the published reviews of Natural Law and Natural Rights, one of the most, and most enduringly, influential was Ernest Fortin's review-article "The New Rights Theory and the Natural Law" (1982). The present essay takes the occasion of that review's latest republication to respond to its main criticisms of the theory of natural law and natural or human rights that is articulated in Natural ...
