The Scourge Of South Korea

“Suicide is everywhere,” says South Korean author Young-ha Kim, referring to modern Korean society, in his op-ed for the The New York Times. Countless others have documented what some call “the scourge of South Korea” - the fact that people of all classes, ages, and genders are committing suicide at exceptionally high rates.

Severance Hospital's John Linton has called for a medical task force to conduct autopsies in fatalities attributed to electric fans to determine the true causes of death. This seems like the best approach -- indeed, the only approach to take -- if the scourge of "fan death" is to be eradicated in South Korea once and for all.

South Korea's Bizarre Fear of "Fan Death"

South Korea takes morals very seriously. From Enes Kaya's TV fall from grace over alleged adultery to pop star Yoo Seung-jun's apparent dodging of his military duty, South Korea is unforgiving when it comes to immoral behaviour. Christian groups protested against the recent gay pride festival, claiming to protect a "land of great moral value throughout its 5000 years of history."
